HaraBara and LexSite Launch On-line Access to Indian Environmental Law and Regulation Database

Mumbai, 3 February 2009--An Environmental Law Database for India is being jointly launched by HaraBara and LexSite through HaraBara.com. It gives instant on-line access to the the statutes, rules, notifications and judgments of the Ministry of Environment and Forests, Government of India. The database is offered free to members of HaraBara Connect™ India, and by subscription to other users. The formal agreement was signed at HaraBara's offices in Colaba, Mumbai today.

"Indian companies are beginning to realize the importance of environmental issues for their business success," said Dr. David Wheat, Co-Founder of HaraBara. "We intend to provide them with easier access to the resources they need to go green. We are very glad to have LexSite, a leading Indian legal services destination site, as our partner."

"The era when businesses could ignore the environmental impact of their actions is long gone. The three prongs spurring them into action are scientific research, public opinion and regulatory measures. HaraBara is providing companies with the means to go green efficiently," said Vivek Hurry, COO, Exactus Corporation. "Exactus is glad to be associated with Harabara in providing access to the regulatory measures that guide and govern this move through its India centric legal portal LexSite.com."

This joint website (<http://www.lexsite.com/harabara/environ.php>) contains environmental statutes, rules, bills, cases and guidelines. Plus it provides updates about the most recent laws and notifications concerning the environment published in India. It is a subscription service, included free with HaraBara Connect™ Silver and Gold memberships.
