HaraBara Urges Youth to Deal With Climate Change at AIESEC Summit

Dr. David Wheat of HaraBara urged Indian youth to become "green" leaders in remarks to AIESEC's National Stakeholders' Summit in Mumbai on 14th April 2009.

Mumbai, 16 April 2009--HaraBara urged Indian youth to address green issues in remarks at the National Stakeholders' Summit Business Dinner presented by AIESEC, the world's largest international youth-run organization. Dr. David Wheat, Co-Founder of HaraBara, Inc., and other panel members discussed the challenges that the economic and environmental crises present to today's young professionals. The event was held at the Taj Mahal Palace & Tower in Mumbai on 14th April 2009.

"We cannot let the current economic crisis overshadow the global environmental challenge," said Wheat, "Ten years from now this recession will be history, but environmental problems will still be critical. If the young people of today do not take action, and force governments to take action, future generations will have to pay for our selfishness. HaraBara helps companies deal with these green challenges."

Many members of HaraBara Connect™ attended the event and networked with some of the leading figures of Indian business. Mr. Jagdish Amin, HaraBara Co-Founder and an AIESEC alumnus, said, "We believe that by sponsoring AIESEC we can make a real contribution to India's future development and success. These young people are the business leaders of tomorrow. And we also feel it is important for them to be aware of both the threats and opportunities of environmental trends."
